other side of the globe" (in Japan with his wife attending a conference). However, what struck the governor most, when watching news coverage on cable TV as he quickly made his way back to the U.S., was "the light of hope in the Virginia Tech community."

Having once served as a missionary in the poverty-ridden Honduras, Kaine said, "People taught me there how to deal with tragedy." It confirmed the conviction that was already deeply held by Kaine, that "God sent Jesus to earth so he could draw closer to us to understand human suffering." And to teach us that "from the worst situation can come hope. It's universal."

When Dr. Schuller asked the governor to share from his heart about what the last week had shown him, Kaine replied, "The week has reminded me of kind of a trinity of lessons:

"First is the immense preciousness of life. As you read the stories of the students and faculty members who were killed, you know every story is so powerful and beautiful, and...what was cut short in terms of what these folks could have done in the world... But the people who sit next to us in the pew, or the people we work with, or the people we go to school with - we're all amazing people.

"The second thing that was very powerful to me, this week, is the universality of human grief. The students and faculty members who were killed, some were from Virginia, some were from other states, many were from overseas. They spoke different native languages, they had different religions, they came from different cultures, they were very, very different in many ways... We're all mortal, we all experience grief and loss, and it cuts across all boundaries of class and country and color... We truly are all God's creation and are unified.

"And, the universality of hope. And what a hard mystery it is that somehow it appears even in the most devastating and darkest circumstances, and yet we know that to be the case from the very story of the crucifixion and resurrection, that from the worst and most humiliating and violent incident, can come the most powerful moment of enlightenment and understanding and community."

announce the offering, introduce the soloist, and then deliver the message.

But "the still, quiet voice" was telling me something else. As I watched Evel and my father walk from the pulpit area, I stood up and approached the microphone. The congregation was now totally silent, even though they had all, only moments ago, stood up and given Evel a thunderous standing ovation for his testimony and soul-moving baptism. In a moment's time, "the still, quiet voice" was telling me, "I believe there are many others here this morning who would like to be baptized. Invite them to come forward."

So I did just that, and I picked up the baptism bowl my father had used to baptize Evel and walked down into the congregation. I noticed that Executive

"I wanted to scream to the world that I am a born-again Christian!"

"I picked you, Dr. Schuller, because I think that you have a message to give to everyone in the world and you're doing it in such a wonderful way. I wanted to scream to the world that I am a born-again Christian on the Hour of Power, and I wanted to be baptized at the Crystal Cathedral. I'm so proud of it.

"Before and after my jumps, I could feel the prayers and good wishes of the crowd as I rode around saying thank you to them. Thank you so much. Today I can feel your prayers and your good Pastor Jim Poit, had quickly responded as well, as had several of our pastors and church elders. A long line of precious persons formed, all seeking baptism.

We baptized nearly 500 people that wonderful morning - and millions more were moved to tears and to prayer, with many making the decision to accept Christ into their hearts as they, too, witnessed this modern miracle on our televised Hour of Power.

ing in on causes and projects that are clearly helpful to others: a few examples are Bill Bryant, actively working as a pastor; Ken Waltz, who does wood-work projects for family and friends; Don Heinlein, who will help anybody with computer challenges; and Art Gebhardt, who assists folks with home maintenance work. Ed and Dorothy McCrory switched roles; Ed is the "round-home" person and pursues his hobbies, while Dorothy re-entered the workplace doing what she loves.

Regardless of the many specific ways we can contribute, or enjoy life, there is one vital thread to be woven with special intentionality through these years. In one word, it is RELATIONSHIPS. This word defines God's mandate for us throughout our lives, but the 3rd Age is a time when it is uniquely possible and important.

Nose-to-the-grindstone days are over. Now we must notice people, give ourselves to them, and find ways to know, and be known by, others. This is true concerning our peers, those of our own age, but even more so, it calls for connecting with the younger generation. We have so much to give them! Love, appreciation, admiration, encouragement, smiles. These are easy to pass around and they nourish another's soul like nothing else. We also have ideas, wisdom, insights, experience that can be shared. Many have skills, interests, and abilities that can be passed on to grandchildren and other youth. Little builds a child up as much as praise and appreciation from older folks unrelated to them. These are gifts that should steadily flow from our lips into the hearts of those we meet.

All the while we are modeling something few of us had much of, namely how to be happy, healthy, and enjoyable in the days often regarded as elderly. The young need to see us living radiantly. In the past, few lived into their late seventies and eighties. There were no patterns or styles for being an older person, they were so exceptional. Today is different and we are leading the way, setting the standards, creating images of how to be in the third quarter of life. It is an exciting challenge God has given us. It is one in which we all can be active.

Prestigious Legacy Award Recognition

By Hannah R. Dean, CCM Communications Student Intern

In recognition of Dr. Robert H. Schuller's lifetime contribution to serving visitors in Orange County, our founding pastor was presented with the prestigious Legacy Award during the Orange County Tourism Council's Service Excellence Awards on April 10, 2007.

Dr. Schuller, the first pastor to receive the award, was so honored for the unique role he has played in the development of Orange County since 1955 when he founded the world's first walk-in/drive-in church, and later built the spectacular Crystal Cathedral, a popular tourist attraction in its own right, which was a bold and creative move that helped put Orange County on the map.

During his acceptance speech, Dr. Schuller shared that he feels blessed to live in the best county with the best people in the world, Orange County.

Your Positive "Power" Team Up North

By Rita Neal, Director, Crystal Cathedral Ministries, Canada

Our ministry in Canada is small in size, but very big in our desire to share the Gospel of Christ while honoring and nurturing our Canadian donors and supporters. We have a staff of four: Rita, Irene, Yvonne, and Henk. Only Yvonne works full time. Rita and Irene work four days a week, and Henk is on call to handle shipping, usually one day a week.

Last year, we received 52,700 letters and e-mails, and mailed out 15,000 packages from our office. We also air courier labels once a week to the Crystal Cathedral Service Center in Garden Grove, from which small items are mailed.

Canadian viewers receive the same mailings and see the same program as do the U.S. viewers. This ministry in Canada began 29 years ago, and has been a self-supporting international ministry for about 20 years. We are very proud of the fact that every year we are able to assist various countries in paying their television costs, helping people in other countries to watch the Hour of Power.

However, our main focus is to respect and honor the Canadians who faithfully donate to our ministry so we may stay on television. We pray regularly for those Canadian viewers who have specific needs, and then mail to them a card let-

Dr. Schuller Appears in OCMA Video Installation

Paradise, a large-scale video installation by Turkish artist Kutlug Ataman, is now appearing at the Orange County Museum of Art (OCMA) through June 3. Filmed primarily in Orange County, the work focuses on the notion of "paradise" often associated with this region.

Ataman's installation includes the words of typical and atypical Californians, each of whom plays a role in the construction of paradise. Filmed in a wide-screen format suggestive of Hollywood films, the piece combines video interviews of people including our own Dr. Robert H. Schuller; as well as twelve-year-old Maya Berko, who wants to be a star; retired Emmy Award-winning producer Robert Henry; star chef James Boyce of the famed Montage Resort and Spa in Laguna Beach; surfer and Quiksilver executive Steve Jones; and more. Altogether, the 24 personalities create a complex, multi-layered portrait of the region.

The Orange County Museum of Art in Newport Beach is located at 850 San Clemente Drive. For more information, call 949-759-1122 or visit www.ocma.net.

100% New Hope: Art & Carol Womer

Every Sunday morning, two veterans of life consistently show up to receive the phone calls of troubled souls. Life has qualified them, partially through pain, to be God's gifts to hurting people. They are reliable cornerstones for our weekend New Hope ministry.

Both have known intense heartache - broken marriages, and broken bodies. Carol suffered a near-death brain hemorrhage while teaching a high school class. Art, unconscious ten days, was given "last rites" after a plane crash as a U. S. Navy man. He still lives a life wracked with pain. They have turned their "hurts into halos" as they share with the distressed from their own deep wells of spiritual growth, learned in life's roughest classroom.

Carol and Art met playing bridge at Marina High School during lunch hour. They didn't talk. Time was too short. This was thirty minutes for bridge, nothing else. However, eventually they danced at the senior prom - they were chaperones, not students. The spark was lit.

Dr. Art, originally from New Brighton, PA, is a highly honored economics teacher with a PhD. In 1984, he received the prestigious Freedoms Foundation Award for Excellence in Education. His unique classroom activity was later captured and made into a book and a Hollywood movie: "The Day the Senior Class got Married." This work became an Emmy-award-winning TV special called "School Break Special."

Art was not planning to be a schoolteacher when young. Ministry was his goal until he saw the "pre-ministry" group at Grove City College. He didn't like their looks. They didn't look dynamic and strong. Since he couldn't identify with them, he turned toward engineering. The U.S. Navy stint interrupted that, then the plane crash, reawakened the ministry call. Art even served successfully as a student pastor in a small chapel of down-and-out poor folks. But teaching economics was the more fitting assignment and his many honors prove this.

Carol was an Illinois farm girl, raised by her grandparents after her single mom saw them to be a better option for Carol's well-being. (Much later, Carol and her mom became the best of friends). The grandparents made sure this bright, talented young person found all she needed to grow up well. She was active in music in high school and the salutatorian of her graduating class. She was an outstanding student at Eastern Illinois University where she majored in the biological sciences, aiming to be a teacher.

Carol headed for Southern California, after she graduated, in response to vigorous recruitment efforts by the California public schools. Marina High School in Huntington Beach won her, and a new life began. It has included active Christian service as a Ministering Elder and certification in our Lay Ministry training course.

Art is clearly gratified by his life as a "church man," as well as teacher. He was a leader and a ruling elder at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church where he took a leading role in developing their Men's Ministry. He then followed Carol to the Crystal Cathedral, impressed with her L.M.T.C. (Lay Ministry Training Credential) diploma completed in 1981. Carol then invited him to join her on the New Hope Team. Now they still come together answering the phones on a key shift with many urgent calls, faithfully for 25 years.

Art is author of a deep and inspiring book, Bound to Be Free. He is a thoughtful Christian and a zealous Bible student, proud of active leadership in our Men's Ministry.

Carol and Art are models of high-level commitment. Here are two outstanding professional teachers who keep on giving behind the scenes. Not many see them in their small New Hope phone booths, but scores have been helped and healed by their caring presence every Sunday morning.

Changing role of the pastor's wife: An interview with Donna Schuller

Sometimes it takes possibility thinking

By Ronald E. Keener, Church Executive magazine

CATHEDRAL

Q. Donna, it's been a year since the installation of you and Robert to this ministry. How did that day go?

A. My husband actually wrote me into the liturgy because he said it was very important that I stand up there with him. Wesley Granberg-Michaelson, the general secretary of our denomination, first read the vows to my husband. Then he...asked me and if I accepted the role and responsibility as Robert's wife to lead this church into the future. That was a first, as far as we know, in tradition. Although it's no secret that my mother-in-law absolutely started this church with my father-in-law 52 years ago, and they have worked side-by-side.

Q. Did your new role change anything in the way you were perceived or experienced by the congregation?

A. People would always question, well what does Donna do; who is she? For several years, they thought I would take over the production role that Arvella had. She produced the Hour of Power. And I had to say, no, no, no, those are not my God-given gifts. Unfortunately, I'm not a beautiful musician like my mother-in-law. So when people used to question me, I felt a little bit insecure about how I answered that.

From the installation on, I don't think people question anymore because they saw me as a partner with my husband and, as such, I think most people, at least our church members realize that includes a vast number of responsibilities in the local church and with the international ministries as well.

Q. How do you and Robert complement each other?

A. I'm the one who wears my emotions on my sleeve pretty much. He's the constant. I'm an extrovert; he's not an introvert but he...likes to chew on information and think about it and ponder it. He's very strategic in his thinking. I'm more, "OK, let's do it now."

Q. How do you describe the communication traits between you and Robert?

A. My husband says, "If it's in her head, it comes out of her mouth." [Laughter.] It has a lot to do with my personality. But I've learned to weigh my words and to think a lot more before I speak now. I think I've become a fairly good listener. My husband has always been very open to me voicing my concerns and opinions, even if he's been gone all day. Robert's always validated me.

Q. Just who are you as a person? Who is the authentic, transparent Donna Schuller?

A. I'm extremely extroverted, I like being out front with people, I love shaking people's hands, I love talking to people, I love looking into people's eyes at the end of the service and asking what they're all about and getting the feedback. I get a lot of energy from that. That's just the way God made me.

I would say I am a counselor; I also like to do some teaching. I love public speaking, but I prefer it in a setting where...people can interrupt and I can interact. I think what's been said about me is that I'm pretty transparent... I don't mind answering questions about my personal life, about my past, about my husband or about my kids.

Q. Do you have a support system around you for encouragement?

A. I have a very good support group right now. I (also) had a group of women at our church when Robert was pastoring at Rancho Capistrano. I started a Bible study for pre-school moms because I was really stressed out. I knew I needed some help and I looked around and I figured other moms did as well. So it started as pre-school moms, graduated into moms, and I think we met for 17 years. But out of that group of 15 to 20, I have always had a handful of...trusting prayer partners.

Q. You're outgoing and a positive person?

A. I am and I think that for most of my life, I've been a positive person. I will say I definitely didn't have the self-esteem I've had since coming back to church in my late 20s and having a personal relationship with Jesus Christ, and then, coming a step further, marrying into this family.

Possibility living is just looking at the person that God created me to be, not comparing myself to others, looking at all the possibilities out there, looking at the good side of situations.

I know...that all things work together for good to those who love God. And even when I am in the midst of a painful situation, I know that there is a lesson to be learned. I think that's what a positive ministry instills in people.

Yes, there's a lot of tragedy and there's a lot of sadness, but...don't get stuck in it. Just think about all the great stuff that is happening and what can happen through people developing a positive, great relationship with Jesus.
